How to plant a Laudato Si’ Garden? Living Chapel - Newsletter N°10

It's important to act and respond with concrete actions to the appeal launched by Pope Francis and in support of the One Trillion Tree Campaign and the United Nations Faith for Earth movement. But how? We gather people of goodwill, schools, associations, institutions and parishes and together we will plant a green space to leave something concrete for future generations.

A Laudato Si’ Garden is created through a small project dedicated to an area of our city where you can plant together trees and shrubs to integrate with the surrounding flora and host animals such as birds, butterflies and other insects. If you want to know more on how to establish a garden, you can read the Laudato Si Guidelines for planting available here. Living in a better world that is respectful of the nature that surrounds us is a dream that can come true thanks to small gestures like planting a tree. The Inclusive Edge, Tapping into the Faith Dimension to Accelerate Nature based Actions for a Sustainable Future

With the rapid advancement in the global environmental crisis at an unprecedented rate, URI along with UNEP, recently undertook an initiative with Faith-Based Organizations and interfaith platforms to spread mass awareness on environmental emergencies that our human race is confronted with. On September 10 2020, we revisited the faith dimension to accelerate nature-based actions for a sustainable future, over a dialogue with eminent faith leaders titled “The Inclusive Edge, Tapping into the Faith Dimension to Accelerate Nature Actions for a Sustainable Future.” The event was moderated by Dia Mirza (Actor, Producer and UN Environment Goodwill Ambassador), the event was addressed by Joyce Msuya (Deputy Executive Director UNEP) and esteemed faith leaders from India. The event was overwhelmingly received with over 12000+ viewers from all over the world through various social media platforms. The encouragement and support of thousands of people through media engagement on channels has reinforced and reiterated the hope that together we can all create a stronger culture of peace, justice and healing for all specially our Mother Earth.
