Frequently Asked Questions

UNEP is engaged in a strategic foresight initiative and aims to establish an institutionalised approach to foresight and horizon scanning. The goal of this endeavour is to develop an anticipatory and future-oriented culture, recognising the fact that tackling the global systemic challenges we are collectively facing requires integrating forward-looking knowledge and insights across disciplines, knowledge systems, and sectors of society.

The process comprises two distinct sensemaking and contextualization steps. The first is at the global level, bringing together a Foresight Expert Panel to interpret, analyse, and cluster emerging signals of change based on the results of a horizon scan survey, providing insight into their potential for disruptive change. Following this global analysis, a series of regional workshops will be held to review the global outputs with the view to providing necessary contextualization to validate and adjust the initial identification of emerging signals of change and provide information on regionally specific issues, risks, and opportunities. This will ultimately culminate in a Global Report to be published in 2024 and inform deliberations of the Summit of the Future in September 2024.

How is this workshop going to run?

The workshop will be run in accordance with the Chatham House rules (anonymity of individual contributions).

It will consist of a series of facilitated breakout sessions during which participants will discuss the four UNEP scenarios, provide their views on possible pathways through which those scenarios could hypothetically materialize and reflect on how this could affect the transition towards a sustainable future. After each round of group work, the participants will meet in plenary to debrief and share their views.

All participants will have an equal say in the discussions. The knowledge produced by the workshop participants will be the result of the collective intelligence generated through the discussions.

How should I prepare for this workshop?

There is no preparation expected from the participants for this workshop. Participants have been carefully selected for their personal expertise and should come to the workshop with an open mind. They should be prepared to constructively discuss their views of the future with the group through the lens of their respective areas of expertise.

Are there any meeting documents for this workshop?

No. Participants will be provided with a workshop agenda. All other materials will be introduced during the workshop along with the instructions for each session. Moderators will guide the participants to facilitate the work.
