

Proposed addition of operating principle:

Comprehensive, system-wide approach to avoid burden shifting

A comprehensive approach, that considers a -system-wide analysis, is needed to first understand the interconnections and complexities of chemical fate across their life cycles, characteristics of global chemical transport according to physical and human processes. Further, this approach is needed to devise effective solutions that avoid shifting the burden from chemical-to-chemical, region-to-region, and across different impacts groups.